Just finished reading a book called "Cancer - Why We're Still Dying to know the Truth" by Phillip Day. The book confirms a hell of a lot that David Icke writes about, intimating that there are more people trustingly going to their more than probable deaths through the multi-billion dollar earnings from chemotherapy and radiotherapy than ever went on in the 2nd world war.

Many people who are dying, and the people around them, worry that they will be in pain. Some people don't have pain. But if a person is in pain, it can usually be well controlled and people can be kept very comfortable. The doctors and nurses looking after the dying person will do all they can. Sometimes restlessness is a sign of being in pain.
