The Reformation had to be political because the medieval church had become a political power and the popes had claimed authority over the secular rulers. When the Roman Empire ceased to exist in the West at the end of the fifth century, the church there found itself in the position of being independent of the political order for the first time since Constantine became emperor.

What we can learn from this is that the Reformation was not just a religious event, but an event that was influenced by numerous outside factors. Furthermore, Bireley's argument about Early Modern Catholicism indicates that we cannot adopt a single-sided interpretation of the Reformation, 16th century Catholicism, or even early Protestantism.
